Letters to the Editor

On being frisked

WASHINGTON

DEAR SIR:

I find it outrageous that State employees who walk or take the bus to work are subjected to humiliating personal searches (regarding a small bottle of prescription medicine carried in my briefcase) while those who are fortunate enough to have a basement parking permit (or who drive in over the weekend) could bring a thermonuclear bomb into the building. Employees with top-secret clearances are being frisked while delivery and maintenance persons come and go with their supplies and equipment unchallenged.

Someone needs to take a second hard look at the new building security system and decide just what we are trying to protect from whom. Meanwhile, if the search of every person and container entering the building is indeed necessary, then make it equally applicable to everyone. Otherwise, use some common sense.

Sincerely,
 JAMES W. CARTER

Art is safe, Conger says

WASHINGTON

DEAR SIR:

I was surprised by Anthony Perkins' letter from Montevideo (June) stating that he thinks the Department's building is unsafe due to the overloading of electrical circuits and, therefore, for art's sake and the preservation of our national heritage, the American decorative arts collection should be removed from the State Department into a more fireproof building.

I can understand his concern but I think he is overly concerned. Safety of the building is not my concern. However, this building seems to have adequate fire detection. In all the Diplomatic Reception Rooms we have fire detection systems and physical

Anti-terror panel reports to Secretary Shultz

It recommends new bureau at State and a 'Diplomatic Security Service'

ESTABLISHMENT of a new Bureau for Diplomatic Security and a Diplomatic Security Service were among recommendations made to Secretary Shultz over the summer by his Advisory Panel on Overseas Security, headed by retired Admiral Bobby Inman. The Secretary responded by endorsing the report "in principle" and by directing Robert E. Lamb to give all his time to coordinating Department action on the recommendations. Mr. Lamb's day-to-day duties as assistant secretary for administration and security were taken over for the time being by his deputies.

The panel said the new bureau should be headed by an assistant secretary, and that its "principal element . . . should be the Diplomatic Security Service, a consolidation of the present Office of Security, the Diplomatic Courier Service and certain other security functions currently performed elsewhere in the Department."

The report added:

"The panel recommends a number of improvements in the Department's protective intelligence, threat analysis and alerting procedures. Additional resources must be dedicated to these activities. There must be improved coordination among various offices within the Department as well as with other agencies to assure the timely acquisition, evaluation and dissemination of accurate information relating to threats against our missions and personnel abroad or against those we are responsible for protecting in the United States. . .

"The panel recommends improvements in the Department's current programs to inform and train Foreign Service personnel and dependents to deal more effectively with the hazards of terrorist and other forms of violence they might encounter.

"The panel recommends that contingency planning at the post level be improved. The Emergency Action Manual should be revised and published as soon as possible, and the crisis management simulation exercise program should be expanded significantly. . .

"The panel recommends that a substantial building program be undertaken to correct the security deficiencies of office buildings of the Department and the other foreign affairs agencies abroad. Some may be renovated to comply with minimum standards to meet currently anticipated hazards, but others will have to be relocated to more secure sites. . .

"The panel recommends that those responsible for the various aspects of the security program, whether in the United States or abroad, be held to a standard of accountability. A procedure should be established by which a board of inquiry is convened in the event of a security incident involving loss of life, grievous injury or massive property destruction due to terrorist or other violence.

"The panel has made a substantial number of additional recommendations which must remain classified."

At a briefing for the news media, Mr. Lamb said he expected the building and renovation program, involving 126 facilities around the world, to take seven to eight years to complete, and that about 75 of the facilities would have to be rebuilt entirely and relocated to make them safer. "We're trying to build these embassies in a way that we think they would be more secure, but hopefully the security will not be as ostentatious as it is today," he said.

Mr. Lamb added: "We asked the panel to look at our vulnerabilities. We asked for a critical, honest assessment. . . There are criticisms in it, clearly, but I think we see them as an opportunity. This was something that we commissioned, and it's an opportunity for us to do something about our problems, and we will."

The panel concluded: "All expert testimony available indicates that terrorism will continue to pose serious problems throughout the world in the foreseeable future. The prospects for totally preventing such attacks are not good. It also must be emphasized that no amount of money can guarantee complete protection against terrorism. If determined, well-trained and funded teams are seeking to do damage, they will eventually succeed. However, there are a number of prudent steps that can be taken to minimize the probability of a successful or damaging terrorist attack, and these are the main themes of the panel's deliberations." □

TWA hijacking triggers task force at State

The hijacking of TWA 847 after it left Athens on June 14 set into motion a working group on the seventh floor, next to the Operations Center. By the time the hostages were freed on July 3, the working group had been in operation for 465 hours and 274 persons had served on its roster.

It was co-chaired by Robert B. Oakley, director, Office for Counter-Terrorism and Emergency Planning, and Richard Murphy, assistant secretary for Near East and South Asia. Their deputies, Parker Borg and Robert Pelletreau, respectively, supervised the operations. The group was staffed around the clock by officers from the Near East bureau, the counter-terrorism office, the Bureau of Politico-Military Affairs, the Office of Communications and the Defense Department.

The Bureau of Consular Affairs also participated, contacting and keeping in touch with the families of the hostages. More than 90 persons participated in that bureau's working group, which manned the telephones on a 24-hour basis.

The Operations Center Watch and the Bureau of Intelligence and Research were also heavily involved. USIA sent volunteers, and secretaries and officers from a variety of bureaus volunteered as well.

Present in voice were Federal Aviation Agency officials, whose own net was connected by an open line to the task force.

The Executive Secretariat, usually through Kenneth Quinn, coordinated assignments between the task force and other bureaus and offices in the Department. □

Security tightens up after shooting at State

Department security procedures have been tightened because of terrorist threats and the tragic shooting of Carole E. Doster in the building on June 21 (see obituary section).

All employees and visitors are now required to pass through metal detectors when coming into the building through pedestrian entrances. Inside, employees must wear their identification badges at all times. In addition, all occupants of vehicles entering the garage beneath Main State must display the badges. □

4 Marines are slain in San Salvador

Four Marine guards were murdered by gunmen at an outdoor restaurant in San Salvador on June 19. Patrick R. Kwiatkowski, Thomas T. Handwork, Bobby J. Dickson and Gregory H. Weber were unarmed and dressed in civilian clothes at the time, as were two other Marines at the restaurant who escaped unharmed.

The embassy reported that the Marines appeared to be the primary target of the attack, which was mounted by 6 to 10 terrorists in camouflage uniforms, riding in a small truck. Two American businessmen and at least eight other persons were also killed. ■

Young State Department staffer is a 'Presidential artist'

He sketches on the run for Mr. Reagan

BY MARK M. STAFFORD

ONLY ADDICTS of the old TV program "What's My Line?" could have foreseen that there would be a job as unusual as the one that I perform for the White House. As a senior graphic designer for the Publishing Services Division of the State Department, I'm assigned from time to time to accompany the advance team for President Reagan that paves the way for his overseas trips. My task is to draw diagrams of all the places where the President will be, ranging from the red carpet at the airport to the interior of a palace. These sketches then become part of the scenario that is used by Mr. Reagan and the people from protocol, security, the press office and other offices.

When I inherited this job from my colleague Richard Florence (he was the first "Presidential artist," as it were, and has since moved on to new responsibilities in the division), I had no idea how rapidly I would have to sketch. But I have since found myself on these trips in a whirlwind of activity, hurriedly drawing diagrams of rooms, buildings, gardens, cemeteries, etc., armed only with a ballpoint pen, pencil and a yellow legal pad attached to a clipboard, as I keep on the move with the advance people who are tracing the route the President will take and making other preparations.

Many times I'm actually trotting as I sketch so, needless to say, the drawings are pretty rough and would be illegible to the over-the-shoulder viewer. Only later, in the privacy of my hotel room, do I redraw the scratch marks, hoping to get it all down on paper before moving on to the next country. At this point I have to remember the size of the parking area in relationship with the building in front of it, as well as the width of the road where the limousines will be pulling up. My drawings are not exactly to scale, but they have to give a good approximation.

When I get back to the Department in Washington, all my sketches are then made into finished ink drawings. This is when the rest of the Graphics Staff in the division pitches in to assist me in the last-minute race against the clock. The help and support I get from staff director Rose Grover

Richard Florence, State's first "Presidential artist."

Sample of a drawing by Mr. Stafford, and from veterans like Joseph Koscinski and Sally Brennan, and newcomers Larry Chandler, Regina McBrayer and John Houchins, is help I couldn't do without.

I'm often asked: "Why doesn't the White House just use a photograph or videotape of these places?" The answer is that photos are used for certain purposes, but that diagrams are necessary, too—for two reasons. First, the sketches provide a perspective—an "aerial" view, if you will—that is difficult to capture in a photo or on video. Second, the diagram abstracts from the mass of detail in a room the essentials that the advance people are concerned with—for instance, the relative size of the table where the President will be sitting and its positioning with respect to other objects. To be shown the basic shape of that table expedites the viewers' comprehension of the layout of the room and the positioning of other elements.

The entire scene at a glance—that's the challenge for me. My drawings have to be authoritative, yet simple enough so that they're readable not only for those who have worked so closely on the trip but also for the newcomer who will be arriving on the scene for the first time. ■

Life after the Foreign Service

Wilbur Wright sells toy construction sets

It's a family business

BOXES OF RED, BLUE AND YELLOW plastic objects in geometric shapes covered the living room floor of the Wright household through the summer last year. A new business was emerging for Wilbur Wright, a Foreign Service officer who has since retired. With the help of his family, he was starting a toy importing business, bringing in an educational construction set designed for children, age 4 to 8. With its brightly-colored interlocking objects, the youngsters build models of bikes, trains, trucks, robots or whatever else they can imagine.

"Just before leaving my job as labor attaché in Brussels in 1983, I met the European distributor of the toy," said Mr. Wright. "He had distributors in five countries and planned to expand. I was thinking about retiring and was looking for something to do in the private sector. He suggested that I export Wilbur Wright and Billy at a toy show, with a customer. (Photo by Donna Gigliotti)

Wright's research suggested there was a potential in toy stores and the educational supply market. So he started importing the toy.

In those early days of what is now Wright International, Inc., Mr. Wright imported the toy in bulk and his family helped with the packaging, which is why they had the boxes spread over their living room floor in Washington. "The summer of 1984 was very uncomfortable because my wife and children were filling boxes and the air-conditioning broke," he said. "Since then, we've switched to a packaging company in Baltimore."

Wright International now has eight sales representatives and is distributing to 110 stores. But it's still a family business. From an office in their home, Mr. Wright's wife, Elaine, handles receiving and shipping. Billy, 13, builds models for his father to use in toy shows, and to send to retailers as examples of what children can make.

Mr. Wright joined the Service in 1964. He's served in Cairo as labor attaché, in Morocco and Florence as economic/commercial officer, at USIA as an economic information officer, in Near Eastern and South Asian Affairs as an information officer, and in the Netherlands as a labor attaché. His assignment to Rome as commercial, then economic, officer sparked his interest in a career in the private sector. "My job was to promote American exports by matching Italian distributors with American businessmen. It was my first experience with the private sector, and it looked like it could be fun and profitable," he said.

Mr. Wright is also working part-time as a consultant for the Board of Examiners. His company, he said, sold about 1,000 of the construction sets in 1984 and expects to sell as many as 20,000 this year.

In addition to Mr. Rawda, who was also the winner for the Near Eastern and South Asian area, four other national employees were named as regional winners. Each of the four received a check for $1,000. They are

We have come to know and respect them, and their judgment and their courage. So we welcome this award, as they do, as a symbol of the friendship and trust we have for each other."

Mr. Jathoonia, the African area's representative, was cited for "distinguished efforts devoted to the betterment of relations between Mauritius and the United States." He was praised for his role in negotiating a bilateral textile program; for initiative in the PL-480 (Food for Peace) program; and for "shouldering the principal responsibility for monitoring, developing and implementing" the American assistance program in Mauritius.

Mr. Rolo, representing Central and South America and the Caribbean, was lauded for "consistently making extraordinary contributions, promoting the interests of the U.S. Government, over an extended period of time." He was praised for furthering "international justice"; for his efforts "to protect and ensure the rights of American citizens under difficult circumstances"; and for "dedication to the furtherance of bilateral relations" between Brazil and the United States.

Mr. Wong, the East Asian representative, won the award for "exceptional advancement of U.S. interests during a distinguished career spanning over four decades of unparalleled dedication and service to the U.S. Government." He was cited for "insightful analytical reporting" which, the citation noted, has helped Consulate General Hong Kong play "a much more successful role" during a period of changes in relations between the United States and China.

As representative for the European and Canadian area, Mr. Calderone was praised for "political contact-building and reporting," which contributed to NATO's deployment in Italy of certain intermediate range nuclear deterrent

During their week-long visit in Washington, the five winners met with Acting Secretary John C. Whitehead (Secretary Shultz was out of the country), director general George S. Vest, and other Department officers. They were guests at a reception, sponsored by the Bureau of Near Eastern and South Asian Affairs, and feted by bureau executive directors. He returned to Washington in 1981 to a position dealing with mineral commodities, Division of Industrial and Strategic Materials, in the Bureau of Economic and Business Affairs.

After completing the six-month economic course at the Foreign Service Institute, Mr. Donahue became deputy chief in the bureau's Division of Industrial and Strategic Materials. Since last October he has dealt with agricultural commodities as chief, Tropical Products Division, also in the economic bureau.

Mr. Donahue is fluent in French, Spanish and Chinese. He is a member of the editorial board, Foreign Service Journal, and a contributor of book reviews. He is married to Linda Louie Donahue, a Foreign Service officer. They have two sons, Adam and Jason. □

Open Forum award goes to Leo Moser

Leo J. Moser, acting principal deputy assistant secretary, Bureau of Human Rights and Humanitarian Affairs, has won the Secretary's Open Forum Award for his accomplishments as the first director of the Foreign Service Institute's Center for the Study of Foreign Affairs, from November 1982 until June of this year. Secretary Shultz presented the award.

Mr. Moser was cited for establishing arrangements for career professionals to publish studies based on their firsthand experiences. He was lauded for convening members of the foreign affairs community for exchanges of information and views.

Mr. Moser entered the Foreign Service in 1954 and has served in Hong Kong, Moscow, Caracas, Taipei, Ottawa and Vientiane. The award, established last year, is for "actions that facilitate the flow of information and ideas from career professionals to those engaged in the formulation of foreign policy." ■

Foreign Service Families

Gutensohn is deputy in family office

Lynn Gutensohn joined the Family Liaison Office as deputy director on July 29. A Foreign Service spouse for 19 years, she accompanied her husband, Mike, on assignments to Bamako, Bangkok, Hong Kong, Jeddah, Vientiane and Seoul. She has worked as a university instructor and consultant to businesses in Korea; as business manager of the American Center's English Language Institute, Jeddah; and as manager of the Navy Federal Credit Union, Hong Kong.

She has been active in community affairs at every post, and served as president of the Parent-Teacher's Organization in Bangkok and chairman of the committee that established the first family liaison office at that post.

Ms. Gutensohn holds a B.S. in business and management from the University of Maryland (summa cum laude) and an M.P.A. from the University of Oklahoma. Her master's thesis was a case study, "How Terrorism Affects the Attitude of Diplomats Toward Overseas Assignment." She and her husband have two sons and two daughters. □

Bookfair will feature Far Eastern art

The 25th annual Bookfair, sponsored by the Association of American Foreign Service Women, later this fall will feature arts and crafts from the Far East. Women at posts in Bangkok and Islamabad recently raised more than $1,300 through bake and flower sales and games, and bought many gifts for Bookfair. Proceeds will help finance scholarships and other needy causes.

"The women," said Dolly Barger, director of the art corner, "sent us silk objects, silver spoons, lacquered-wood animals, placemats, napkins and color-

Bookfair is seeking paintings, stamps, posters, records and books. Donors may place them in bins near the elevators adjoining the garage; at the D Street entrance to the Department; and at the Foreign Service Institute and USIA. Call Barbara Huso at 223-5796 for home pick-up. □

Workshop on education slated for Nov. 5

The Family Liaison Office and Overseas Briefing Center will present

another new workshop on education, on November 5. Designed with the Foreign Service family in mind, the workshop will highlight the college admissions process.

It will address such topics as choosing and applying to colleges, testing, financial aid, advanced placement courses versus the international baccalaureate and recent educational trends in the United States. An afternoon presentation will focus on the range of higher educational opportunities in the Washington area.

The workshop will be from 9:15 a.m. to 3 p.m. at the Foreign Service Institute. To register, call 235-8784. ■

It would defeat the whole purpose of the Americana Project of furnishing the Diplomatic Reception Rooms to remove the collection from this building. The 16 Diplomatic Reception Rooms on the eighth floor and 10 rooms in the Secretary of State's area on the seventh floor are one of the greatest reflections of our American cultural heritage to chiefs of state, heads of government, foreign ministers and other foreign and American notables who are entertained here. Otherwise, this level of visitor sees only modern airports and hotels which of necessity are very modern but which do not show the American cultural accomplishment.

If it is any comfort, ours is probably the only collection in the Government that is fully insured. We carry $30,000,000 fire and liability insurance at all times. Not that the collection could be replaced; it cannot.

I can only invite Mr. Perkins to come for a visit in the future to (a) enjoy the collection and (b) see the physical safeguards.

A word on awards

DEAR SIR:

Re: Awards. The key word is "Recognition."

It is good to see that some supervisors recognize the extra effort given by some individuals. It would be better, however, if more official recognition of work above and beyond the norm existed. There are many anonymous people whose hard work and dedication have thus far remained unnoticed.

Lacking this recognition, the next step would be to delete the award as a factor in promotion panels' decisions, since it would unfairly tip the scales of

A new challenge confronts the Bureau of Personnel—what to do about the appeal from Foreign Service daughters in New Delhi that more boys be maneuvered into the American school there. Anybody have a suggestion? The girls' petition, presented to Personnel's assignments office, appears below. □

Owing to the paucity of male students at AES, we, the undersigned, wish to register our protest to Personnel/Washington for its complete lack of sensitivity to the dreadful demographic dilemma here. THERE ARE TOO MANY GIRLS. SEND GUYS! When you check the family profiles of personnel assigned to New Delhi please ensure that the minor dependents are male, between 15 and 18 and have an ETA Delhi of no later than 8/85. Department Operations

Role of new bureau is outlined

Details of the responsibilities and operations of State's new Bureau of International Communications and Information Policy (STATE, July) have been announced by the Department. The bureau combines the functions and personnel of the Office of the Coordinator for International Communication and Information Policy, which reported to the under secretary for security assistance, science and technology, and of the Office of International Communications Policy, which was in the Bureau of Economic and Business Affairs. The announcement makes the following points:

The new bureau is headed by a director, whose rank is administratively equivalent to that of an assistant secretary and who is appointed by the President and confirmed by the Senate. The director holds the statutory rank of ambassador and the statutory title of coordinator for international communications and information policy. Diana Lady Dougan has been confirmed by the Senate and heads the bureau.

(Other ranking bureau officers were listed in a Department Notice of July 23. They are Rush Taylor Jr., Ms. Dougan's deputy, and the following acting directors: Earl Barbely, Office of Technical Standards and Development; Randy Earnest, Office of Regulatory and Treaty Affairs; Lucy Hummer, Office of Planning and Analysis; Chuck Loveridge, Office of External Relations; and Richard Shrum, Office of International Radio Communications.)

Bureau responsibilities

The consolidation of responsibilities is aimed at achieving a more effective focus for the U.S. Government's international communications and information policy development and implementation, and coordination of the Department's work on these issues. The bureau has primary responsibility within the Department for the formulation, coordination, implementation and oversight of international communications and information policy. In that

58 years after Lindbergh: Burt 'flies' over the ocean

Reporters in seven European countries put questions on U.S. policy to Richard Burt the other week, as the ambassador to West Germany sat in a television studio in Washington.

Thanks to "Worldnet," USIA's satellite hookup for holding transoceanic press conferences, Mr. Burt was able to answer the questions and explain U.S. views to the reporters, who could see and hear him on television screens at the U.S. missions in Helsinki, Belgrade, London, Stockholm, Bonn, Brussels and Paris.

ranking State officials who have appeared on Worldnet several times. "It's a serious program," he said. "It's a great opportunity for us. TV is becoming increasingly important, and learning to use the medium is becoming a necessity."

"Worldnet" was inaugurated in 1983, when former UN Ambassador Jeane Kirkpatrick appeared in a broadcast to European nations to clarify U.S. policy regarding the role of the United States in the Grenada rescue mission. The telecasts have reached 55 major cities in 47 countries, on six continents. USIA expects to be able to reach as many as 100 posts over the next two years. □

capacity, it:

—Coordinates with other bureaus and offices of the Department in this "increasingly important" policy area.

—Coordinates and supervises, in accordance with authority delegated by the President and on behalf of the under secretary, the activities of the Senior Interagency Group on International Communications and Information Policy, and chairs and participates in inter-agency meetings, including the Working Group on Transborder Data Flow.

—Maintains liaison with agencies in the executive branch concerned with communications and information policy, including the Federal Communications Commission.

—Provides guidance and instructions to U.S. representatives at meetings of international organizations.

—Maintains, in coordination with State's Bureau of Legislative and Intergovernmental Affairs, liaison with Congress.

—Maintains liaison with representatives of the private sector to assure that their concerns are promptly considered by the Department and other executive branch agencies.

—Assists in arranging meetings of private-sector groups that advise State and other agencies.

International front

The Bureau also has substantive responsibility for providing guidance and instructions for the use of U.S. representatives at international organizations such as the International Telecommunications Satellite Organization and the International Maritime Satellite Organization; for representing the United States in meetings of the International Telecommunication Union (ITU), the communications committee of the Organization for Economic Cooperation and Development, regional communications organizations such as the Inter-American Telecommunications Conference and the North Atlantic Consultative Process; and for chairing the U.S. National Committees of the International Telephone and Telegraph Consultative Committee and the International Radio Consultative Committee.

Day-to-day communications operations of the Department continue to be the responsibility of the Bureau of Administration and Security's Office of Communications, and trade policy aspects of telecommunications issues continue to be the responsibility of the Bureau of Economic and Business Affairs. The Bureau of International Organizations will continue to have responsibility for providing instructions and guidance to U.S. delegations on administrative and budgetary matters, as well as on political issues which arise in the UN specialized agencies, to ensure consistency of U.S. policy throughout the UN system.

The goals

The creation of the new bureau, the announcement said, reflects the increasing priority the Department is giving to communications and information issues in what Secretary Shultz, in testimony before the Senate Committee on Foreign Relations last January 31, referred to as the "onrushing age of information technology." Over the past two years, it was recalled, Mr. Shultz has designated a number of policy goals in the international communication and information areas. They are to:

—Enhance the free flow of information and ideas among nations.

—Promote harmonious international relations and contribute to world peace and understanding through communications.

—Promote, in cooperation with other nations, the development of efficient, innovative and cost-effective international communications services responsive to the needs of the users and supportive of the expanding requirements of commerce and trade.

—Ensure the continued technological and economic strength and leadership of the United States in the fields of communications and information.

—Expand U.S. private-sector investment and involvement in civil space and space-related activities.

—Promote the continuing evolution of an international configuration of communications services that can meet the needs of all nations of the world, with attention directed toward providing such services to economically less-developed countries.

—Ensure efficient utilization of the geostationary orbit and electromagnetic frequency spectrum.

—Ensure that the communications and information policy aspects of national defense, security and emergency preparedness needs are satisfactorily met.

In its coordinating role, the bureau will assure that any communication from a foreign government or international organization sent to the Department is forwarded as appropriate to other Government agencies. This will not prevent embassies or foreign governments from forwarding queries directly to other departments or agencies, the announcement said, but rather is intended to facilitate and coordinate an effective U.S. response. □

Disciplined Writing and Career Development

Your precious prose, if it gobbles and struts, is just a turkey

It's better to be human when you write

BY MORTIMER D. GOLDSTEIN

WE RETURN in this article to the heart of the series: the six principles for a writing style that give readers what they need and want—a quickly comprehensible text that is lively and interesting. (For a list of the six principles, see STATE, May).

I can't offer a money-back guarantee, but I'm morally certain that, subject to two conditions, observance of the principles will cure the most deep-seated addiction to gobbledygook.

First, you must be willing to concentrate and persist. Forming new writing habits is difficult in the best of circumstances. It's especially difficult when you're working in an environment that constantly presents as models exactly what you should want to avoid.

Second, you must assume a full measure of humility and open-mindedness. Intellectual arrogance, if you have any, can be an absolute barrier to ideas that challenge what you were once taught and have since believed to be right.

But a living language refuses to remain static, and what specialists consider correct and effective today differs at some points from what your teachers, perhaps a bit out of date themselves, considered gospel decades ago.

Gobbledygook

I just referred to gobbledygook. It's a classic American epithet, aimed unfairly at no one but federal public servants, though it would be equally applicable, I believe, to a good part of business and academia. The term was coined by a Texas congressman, Maury Maverick, whose disenchantment with Washington language was intense. He explained the origin of his word in the New York Times Magazine in 1944, as follows:

It must have come in a vision. Perhaps I was thinking of the old bearded turkey gobble back in Texas who was always gobbledygobbling and strutting with ridiculous pomposity. At the end of his gobble there was sort of a gook.

I don't recall that he offered a formal definition, but I have one of my own:

A common form of official writing; an indigestible coagulated concoction of circumlocution and pomposity, pretentious words, and the passive voice, generously seasoned with needless jargon and esoteric acronyms, drained of human juices, and packed in overstuffed sentences.

In short, gobbledygook is the exact opposite of what this series of articles stands for.

Be human

The core of gobbledygook, it seems to me, is its lack of humanity. Perhaps for that reason I put "write person-to-person" first among our six principles.

In conversation we express our ideas in personal and informal terms and ordinarily in a simple style. In that kind of atmosphere, two minds can usually find a common wavelength without difficulty. But unless you're one of the exceptions, when you pick up a pencil or dictate or start operating a writing machine, your style is transformed. You then probably tend to sound impersonal and formal—even stiff—and may become self-protective and officious.

When you write impersonally and formally, you may think you're being "safe," but you're running two risks. Your readers may find it difficult to grasp your message quickly, and they may be put off by your tone and react negatively to your message. The average reader probably bristles at letters that read like this:

The law requires that an applicant must present original documents or copies certified by a notary public before action may be taken by this office. An application must be signed with the applicant's full, legal name and dated. Your error in failing to comply with those requirements makes it impossible to process your undated application, which is returned herewith and should be resubmitted in proper form.

Imagine how you would react to that statement and to the following somewhat longer alternative:

We regret that we must return your recent application and its attached documents. Though you have provided all the information requested, the law requires us to obtain original documents or copies certified by a notary public. We would therefore appreciate your having the enclosed copies certified. If you choose to send us the original papers, we will return them to you after making copies here. Please sign the application with your full name and show the date next to your signature. As soon as we have the new signed and dated application with the original or certified documents, we can proceed quickly with your request.

The good writer, I repeat, writes as a human being, not as a computer, an institution or a square on an organization chart. You should therefore avoid phrases like the Department considers and this bureau has determined or, even worse, impersonal pronouns followed by the passive voice, as in it is believed and it should be understood.

Instead, whenever circumstances permit, use personal pronouns: I, we, you, their. And use names of people; for example, by combining names with titles as in Henry Connors, our legal adviser; Ambassador McEnroe; George Borg, the consul general.

Those suggestions apply not only to correspondence with the public but also to papers on policy issues and routine memorandums. If a briefing paper for the President can start out, as it usually does, like this:

You are to see Prime Minister Horacio Orantes at 11 a.m. on October 17, with me and Foreign Minister Carlos Santana. I believe the Prime Minister will ...

there's no reason why an interoffice paper must be drafted in such starchy language as:

An appointment with you has been arranged with Prime Minister Horacio Orantes at 11 a.m. on October 17. We are informed that the Prime Minister will be accompanied by Foreign Minister Carlos Santana. I will be present. It is believed that the Prime Minister intends to ...

Note how readily circumlocution fits in with a dehumanized style.

A footnote: In proposing a more personal and less formal style in writing, I don't suggest that they're necessarily two sides of the same coin. A more personal approach can be properly used in highly formal documents, and rigidly impersonal language is sometimes customary in less formal documents. We need only refer to a first-person diplomatic note—quite personal in appearance, but usually quite formal—and a third-person note or memorandum—an impersonal document but not necessarily formally written in other respects.

Contractions

A second method of making a reader feel in contact with another human being is the use of contractions. You use them all the time in speech: I've, we'll, you're, it's. They're colloquialisms, but that doesn't mean they're nonstandard

English or inappropriate for the use of educated people. More and more, contractions have moved into general writing. My reaction to the basic trend is to be liberal in their use when they don't offend diplomatic tradition, protocol or other necessary formality, when they don't undermine a proper level of dignity (dignity meaning "deserving of respect" rather than solemn or pompous), when they don't make you feel uncomfortable, and when they don't annoy your boss.

Should we write as we talk?

The considerations we've just discussed have led some people to argue: "We should write as we talk." That's an attractive idea but, expressed without qualification, it's clearly an oversimplification. I doubt whether its advocates have thought this through.

Writing and speech are decidedly different modes of communication. When we talk, we can color or adjust the meaning of our words through the use of volume, tone of voice, body language, facial expression and the like. Beyond that, we can observe the demeanor of the listener and repeat or explain when we perceive a sense of uncertainty or confusion. But in writing those opportunities aren't available. We must therefore get all of our meaning and nuances on paper and be especially careful in our choice of words. We must try to anticipate the problems our readers may have in understanding complicated ideas, and we must take pains, by using headings, examples and recapitulation, to help the reader through difficult territory.

To sum up, conversational English is likely to have a desirable simplicity, ease and humanity—qualities you should try to keep in your writing. But that doesn't mean that an effective oral style can properly be duplicated on paper. One Government executive some years ago tried to get this idea across to his staff in a memorandum that implored them to abandon the gobbledygook he saw all about him and write in the person-to-person style we're reviewing here. He called for a "quasi-conversational" style. As a short description of what you should ordinarily seek in your writing style, that's a reasonable standard.

The read-it-aloud test

Experienced speechwriters know that one of the principal qualities of a good speech is its fluidity. Its words and ideas must flow easily, and it must be free of such distractions as awkward syntax, annoying repetitions and long parenthetical comments that split a sentence into hard-to-follow segments. A speech draft is naturally tested aloud before it's put to bed.

The read-it-aloud test applied to material written for the ear can also be applied with advantage to material written for the eye. If, in reviewing a draft, you find a sentence or paragraph that seems to stumble or to be unnatural but you can't find the source of the difficulty, one way to solve your problem is to read the text aloud. Awkward constructions are sometimes revealed more readily through the ear than the eye, and a sentence that doesn't sound quite right probably needs editing.

We tend to see what we expect to see. That's why so many typographical errors, small grammatical mistakes and omissions go undetected even though the writer, the editor and the proofreaders are all conscientious reviewers. Reading a text aloud reduces the chance of missing that kind of flaw. The read-it-aloud test is worth the effort. Try to find time for it, especially when composing telegrams and papers that are going upstairs. ■

For languages, there are pluses at a field school

BY CAMERON R. HUME

The author, director until recently of the Tunis school, now has an assignment in Beirut.

Whatever it was that brought us into the Foreign Service—whether curiosity about other peoples and cultures, desire for a career of continuous change and challenge, or just restlessness—the same things lead some of us to volunteer for long-term hard-language study.

Those who enroll to study Arabic have decided not only to serve in an area of importance and sensitivity for the United States, but they have also chosen to learn one of the world's hardest languages. For over 30 years, the Foreign Service Institute's Arabic language field school, first in Beirut and now in Tunis, has taught Arabic to these students, especially those taking advanced training.

Language learning is a subject that generates strongly held opinions, and one of the most common has been that the only way to really learn a language is to study it in the field. The institute's success in teaching over 40 languages in Washington challenges this assumption. Whatever the benefits of learning a language in its native environment, the plain fact is that even in a field school the crucial learning takes place in the classroom environment. If so, how is the work of a field school to be distinguished from that of the institute in Washington?

The biggest advantage a field school has is simply geographic: the paths of retreat from the foreign language environment have been cut off. When students finish their daily classes, they still use the language on the street, in the shops or with their neighbors. The need to understand and communicate in their environment adds to the motivation to learn the language.

Living in the foreign language environment stimulates students to seek understanding of the people and their culture. This is understanding at a practical, personal level: why does each conversation begin with a lengthy and repetitious exchange of greetings? How can one decline a cup of coffee without giving offense? When are prices fixed, and when does one haggle? When does "yes" mean agreement, and when merely that one has been understood?

A field school is not as well equipped as a university or the institute's School of Area Studies to provide academic courses. A good library, field travel, a collection of documentary television programs, immediate access to Arabic media and the urge to explore one's physical and social environment substitute for a formal program of lectures.

The second major advantage is that the classes take place in the Arabic language environment. The teachers naturally introduce the students to their environment, and encourage them to use the language in different settings.

Other classes derive vitality from the Arabic media. Students are more interested in the latest report from Beirut than in textbook articles on the Congo crisis of the 1960s. Each day advanced classes translate the radio newscast, improving their comprehension as they learn about current events from a local viewpoint. The school's collection of video-tapes trains students to understand different dialects of Arabic, such as Egyptian, Syrian or Saudi. Ready access to the foreign language environment makes it easier to prepare for advanced students specialized material, such as a collection of economic and commercial readings.

If the institute teaches over 40 languages at its Rosslyn, Va., campus, why are there separate field schools for Arabic, Chinese, Japanese and Korean? The answers are both cultural and linguistic.

None of these languages is a member of the Indo-European family of languages, and each is the embodiment of a rich national culture quite different from ours. For Muslims everywhere, Arabic is the language of God. And so, starting the Koran, Arabic and its literature have been inseparable from the religious heritage of Islam. Through 1,400 years, Arabic has served to bind together by a shared religion, literature and culture the area from the Atlantic Ocean to the Persian Gulf.

All of these languages are hard. Arabic is endowed with an enormous vocabulary that has few cognates in English. Arabic script, which already looks like shorthand, is written without the vowel sounds. The grammar is incredibly complex: nouns are distinguished by gender, by case, by definiteness or indefiniteness, and by whether they refer to humans or not. And they are counted as singular, dual, plural up to 10, or plural over 10.

Like us, Arabs modify words at the beginning and ending, but they are just as likely to change the sounds and letters in the middle. It's no wonder that foreigners learn this language only through long and hard work. Students find that at least three hours of study are needed to prepare for the normal institute pattern of small classes and intensive instruction. The courses are ordered by a four-semester syllabus that progresses to class 3 in public speaking, interpretation and literature.

Graduating students usually agree that mastering Arabic has been their most difficult intellectual challenge. Despite the recurrent periods of frustration during training, success inevitably brings with it a strong sense of personal accomplishment. Arabic can open the way to more interesting jobs after graduation, or make any job in an Arabic-speaking country more interesting.

Later in their careers, most Arabists agree that hard-language study did little to advance their careers. If so, why should other officers bother to do it?

Maybe for the same curiosity, desire for challenge and restlessness that first brought them into the Service. □

It has just been suggested that our son might be learning-disabled. I would like to know what's available to my son so I may plan ahead for his care.

I certainly commend your planning practice. It's our policy to authorize educational evaluations on a one-time basis for children with suspected learning disabilities, to obtain baseline information. I strongly recommend this evaluation be done as part of your son's home-leave physical examination. Therefore, it's important that parents report learning, emotional or behavioral problems to the examining physician. He/she will evaluate your concerns and, if indicated, arrange the necessary medical, psychiatric and educational evaluations. Depending on the needs of the child, neurological, speech, language and hearing and developmental pediatric examinations may also be authorized. It should be understood that although psychiatric evaluations may be repeated as part of subsequent medical clearance exams, the educational evaluation will be done only once at State's expense for baseline information. Also, final medical clearance won't be based on availability of educational facilities at post, but on the availability of adequate medical facilities. Since you're already abroad, discuss your son's problem fully with the appropriate school personnel. Written reports are important to establish the need for further evaluation. You should contact your regional medical officer, State Department nurse or the regional psychiatrist to discuss your son's problems, and from these discussions determine your planning for the future.

Not too long ago, I read that aluminum cookware may contribute to Alzheimer disease. Should I throw out all my aluminum cookware that I've been using for years?

The weight of the scientific evidence to date is that aluminum does not cause Alzheimer's and that using aluminum cookware is safe. There's been a lot written recently about the high amounts of aluminum in the body being associated with Alzheimer's. But when the scientists investigated the amount of aluminum in the drinking water, antacid tablets and the use of aluminum cookware, it was concluded that these factors weren't connected. Aluminum builds up in patients with Alzheimer's for unknown reasons, but it may be the result of the disease itself and not the cause.

My small baby has a blocked tear duct, and the embassy nurse recommends that I wipe the eye frequently to remove any discharge, and to massage gently the inside corner of his eye. Isn't there something else I should do? Some of the people say the baby should be "medevaced" for eye surgery.

Blocked tear ducts are common in small infants, and the advice given you by the nurse is proper. The tear duct is a tiny tube with one end connecting the inner corner of the eye and the other opening into the nose. The tear ducts drain the watery fluids that bathe the eye when you blink. In babies, the

As the administrative officer at one of our small posts, I've been actively encouraging the use of seat belts in official and privately-owned vehicles. However, someone did bring to my attention the question of the use of belts by pregnant women. This is of more than passing interest to me, as we have just found out my wife is pregnant. What is your suggestion on this?

A.

I can't stress enough the use of seat belts in vehicles. Seat belts for pregnant women should always be the type using a shoulder belt combined with the lap belt fastened over the thighs, under the abdomen. This distributes forces evenly during a collision. Auto accidents are the leading cause of death in women of child-bearing age. The prudent use of belts may help avert this tragic loss of life. □

WASHINGTON

I was devastated to read that charcoal broiling can cause cancer. After years of being overseas, I am enjoying barbecuing in my backyard. I've stopped smoking to keep from getting cancer; do I have to give up my charcoaling too?

Not entirely! There seems to be a very small increased cancer risk associated with years of eating smoked and charcoal-cooked meats. Some of the substances released by burning and smoking foods are similar to the cancer-causing chemicals produced by a burning cigarette, but not nearly as dangerous. In theory, the very small risk from barbecued food seems to increase when food is cooked for a long time at high temperatures. High-protein foods such as meat and fish may be a greater potential risk than vegetables. If you're concerned, you may be able to reduce the formation of cancer-causing substances by cooking leaner meats and decreasing the amounts of fat dripping on the hot coals. Try also to avoid cooking close to the flame.

Dr. Dustin's health hints

Foreign Service personnel are subject to long airline trips. Listed below are some exercises that may be performed during the flights. These simple procedures can eliminate some of the fatigue encountered. They certainly will help from a health standpoint to prevent circulatory problems associated with sitting in one place over long periods of time.

1. Jogging on the spot: Use simple rhythmic movements engaging as many large muscle groups as possible. Raise your heels up on your toes as though running and at the same time move your arms back and forth as you do when you walk rapidly or jog. Repeat this 30 times.

2. Toe raising: This is similar to the above, but add weight by pressing your elbows on your knees. Keep raising and lowering the toes, exercising the big calf muscles. Repeat this 30 times.

3. Shoulder rolling: Move shoulders gently and rhythmically 15 times each shoulder and 15 times together.

4. Head rolling: Turn head to the fullest extent to the right and nod a few times. Repeat to the left. End this exercise by rolling the whole head in a circle. Do this five times to each side, then full circle five times.

5. Forward bends: Contract the stomach muscles and drop your body forward on the knees. Lift toes and relax stomach muscles. Sit upright and repeat maneuver 30 times.

6. Foot rolling: Twist ankles in a circle first one way, then the other. Repeat 15 times in each direction.

On a crowded aircraft, it's difficult to get up and move about the cabin. However, do try to stretch your legs for a few minutes when you do escape the confines of your seat. These simple procedures can go a long way in preventing some of the more serious circulatory problems one sees associated with long-distance air travel. □

Alcohol Awareness Program

1 drink brings a relapse; but he makes it back

BY A RETIRED FSO

It was a Monday afternoon in 1966, just before Halloween. I was seated at a table in a friend's apartment, staring at a vodka bottle. I poured some in a glass, then called the doctor to ask if he had gotten me admitted to a hospital yet. A few short weeks before, this doctor had shown me an X-ray of my liver. It was frightening, and to ward off the fear it generated I went out and got drunk, an action just the opposite of what a normal person would have done. I was on the road to self-destruction.

When, finally, I was hospitalized, I vibrated in every bone in my body; I was feverish, I threw up plain water; I couldn't sleep. It was hell. Later, I was informed it is called withdrawal. By the third day I was able to retain some tea without nausea. It was also my third day without alcohol—a minor miracle.

That night, they brought in a man ranting and raving. He was drunk. They got him quieted down with a giant hypodermic and next day he ate a big breakfast, got a razor, shaved, dressed and left. My curiosity was unparalleled. Why was I still sick and he could eat and walk off? The doctor explained that he was a drunk and I was an "alcoholic," the first time I'd ever thought about the word. "What's an alcoholic?", I asked. My doctor handed me a book called "A Primer on Alcoholism" by Marty Mann, the late director of the National Council of Alcoholism.

I saw myself in every page in the book. It was a revelation and a relief. A relief because the author said that the only solution for alcoholism was to stop drinking alcohol. At first this was so funny I burst out laughing. That's all very well to say, but how do you accomplish it? I had tried many times before and failed. What could be done differently now? I remembered many hospitalizations and every form of test and examination, and nothing could explain my constant sickness. Actually it was getting worse.

The question was what to do and how to do it. The doctor stopped by my room that afternoon with the answer. He said that some members of Alcoholics Anonymous were coming to the hospital that evening and he suggested

I should attend. This was my first AA meeting.

That meeting was the beginning of a new life for me. A man and a woman met with us (a group of about six or eight patients) and told us they were alcoholics. I was shocked. They were both well-dressed, successful-looking, healthy and apparently happy. They smiled and laughed a lot—something I hadn't been able to do for a long, long time. They did not lecture us but "told their stories," sharing with us intimate glimpses of their past. They were telling me things which I knew to be the truth since I'd experienced exactly the same things myself—the feelings of guilt, shame, and remorse; of sickness; of wanting to drink like other people and failing; knowing deep down that what was happening to me was disastrous but being unable or unwilling to admit it even to myself.

One Thursday evening in March 1967, while waiting for some AA members to accompany me to a meeting, I noticed in the sky above an airplane headed west. I wondered: will I ever be assigned overseas again? Could I stand a trip across the ocean, with all the free booze, and be able to withstand the situation? Could I make it?

The answer was not long in coming. About 60 days later, I was assigned on temporary duty to Vietnam. What a transition! Not only the plane flight but the whole Vietnam milieu was a raging temptation to drink. On arrival in Saigon, I was booked into a hotel which had a bar at the entrance and another at the mid-landing. This obstacle course I traversed at least six times a day. I located AA. Mostly, I stayed sober helping another man who was referred to me for help (I was only seven months into the AA program). This was the way AA started, I thought—two sick men, in Ohio, in 1935, trying to help each other stay sober. They succeeded simply by giving of themselves, one to the other. That's what kept me sober in Vietnam.

I returned from Vietnam, sober, in July 1967. That Halloween marked my first year of sobriety. By then I was carrying the message to other alcoholics in prisons, detox centers and hospitals, including the hospital where I had first encountered AA—giving what I saw at my first AA meeting—hope.

Time passed; I retired in 1972. I moved from my old neighborhood. I set up a new business. And I quit going to meetings.

As I look back, what was to happen in 1974 I am convinced happened because of my failure to persist in attending AA meetings and because, deep down, I was never willing to accept that I really was an alcoholic. These two factors combined to cause the inevitable—on December 30, 1974, eight years and two months after first coming to AA, I took a drink. The illness manifested itself quickly, and within nine months after picking up that first drink I was hospitalized again. Alcoholism was proving itself to be cunning, baffling, powerful—just as I had been taught in AA. I sold my home, ruined the business I had organized after retiring, split my family, and almost killed myself in the process.

On April Fool's Day, 1976, my daughter and an old AA friend hospitalized me for the second time, in the same hospital where I had been in 1966.

But last April 1, I celebrated nine years of continuous sobriety. I am living and working now in Manila as a partner in a garment manufacturing enterprise. I invite anyone who so desires to contact me in care of the regional medical officer, U.S. embassy, Manila, Philippines. Or call the AA Answerphone in Manila (open 24 hours a day), 867-946. Ask for Harvey.

If you think you have a problem with alcohol, get in touch with the Alcohol Awareness Program, Department of State, Washington, D.C., (202) 632-1843 or 632-8804. Department regulations prescribe that all contacts with the program be handled on a medically-confidential basis. There will be no record of this matter in your personnel file; job security or promotion opportunities will in no way be jeopardized. ■
